Imagine an Office Where...

By Mickey Cash

Imagine an office with a domestic feel.

Employees are finding they aren't getting enough social interaction and job satisfaction working from home. Companies are now turning their attention toward investing in office redesign. If done right, the space is incredibly welcoming, smart and adaptable. While returning to work five days a week may never be the standard again, more and more companies are insisting employees come to the office—at least part of the time. Catching the train three days a week is still better than five. So keep the home office looking sharp, but compromise nothing when it comes to feeling good about your surroundings at work. Oasis Berco's social structures are a credible solution this kind of office furnishing progression.

Imagine an office curated with intention—down to the function of the textile.

Imagine a system of hub clusters coming together to anchor an open floor plan. The tailored hub seating becomes an essential element of the office and the environment is contemporary to the max. The 55 inch hub walls provide visual privacy and the soft seating feels more like a sofa than a chair for absolute visual and tactile comfort. The emotionally overwhelming patterns of the past are now replaced with thoughtful colors that bring in elements of the outdoors. The upholstered hubs are sustainably and mindfully crafted from FSC-certified wood and are customizable with 24 Greenguard certified Mayer fabrics.

Imagine staying connected comfortably.

Design is a product journey and it's essential to find innovative solutions that fit harmoniously and respectfully with the old bones of the office architecture hosting them. With good design nobody should feel trapped. More light is brought to one-on-ones with office meeting pods designed with increased amounts of glass. Throughout the office, UL-listed plug and play features play nicely with tech and keep cords out of the walkway. This is a sign of an office pod engineered to its fullest form, and is appreciated by many in the design and build community.

Imagine a threshold to a new space.

Imagine walking inside from the hectic commute to work and immediately transitioning to a moment of peace. That moment of peace that could define the entire day is enhanced with more options in social structures. Visually stunning, Soft Architecture transforms unused spaces into areas where people can work peacefully, meet, or socialize. In the bonus workspaces created, oak leg tables provoke a feeling of something warm and familiar like home. Zero-waste processes from recycled materials inspire the choices of acoustic fleece ceiling material for the Soft Architecture's louver-style canopies and bridges. In the construction of the modern office, Soft Architecture is a great way to keep the historic charm of the building, update the interior, and not put drywall between people.

Oasis Linear Phone Booth

Imagine bringing life to work.

The office has been through some dramatic changes over the years, but what if the change was so gradual there was acceptance? What if the changes could feel like a respectful transition from the forms the office had taken before? Imagine absorbing an environment that gives a sense of normalcy in collaboration. Imagine mindful materials used on everything from the laminate of the worktop in the soft hub meeting area to the door handle of the telehealth phone booth in the entryway to the wall panels of the meeting pod with the big team logo.

Oasis Berco highlights its ability to create a residential and welcoming feel to office furniture through the rigorous design of their soft hub seating, phone booths, meeting pods, and other social structures. Creating functional accuracy while bringing the heart of the workplace out through the office aesthetic. All this takes experience and Oasis Berco is here to help.

Oasis Berco helps make informed contract furniture decisions by offering furniture made in the USA with sales representatives nationwide and an in-house design team for personalized solutions. Unlike many of its competitors, Oasis Berco products are made in the US, almost entirely from US materials, reducing the carbon emissions associated with transportation throughout the manufacturing and distribution process.
